

Reading a dialogue: Talking with a friend (informal language)

- Peter: How are things going Jane?
- Jane: Good, things are good. I'm really enjoying my job. Lots of work! But I'll be rich in five years and I'll be able to buy a big house in London.
- Peter: You work all the time! I don't know how you manage it! You should take a break sometime. Come and play basketball with me! We'll have a good time! It's a good way to spend our free time.
- Jane: I'm too busy mate, I'm too busy! My job is so exciting right now. You should think about changing your job, Peter.
- Peter: I don't want to be ambitious. I'm good in this company.
- Jane: You always say that your job is really boring!
- Peter: You're right. I'm always thinking about changing my job. But I only know about advertising, nothing else.
- Jane: There are so many publicists around. You need to specialise!
- Peter: Perhaps you're right. But my job isn't so bad!
- Jane: Is the money good?
- Peter: Not bad. I can pay all my bills.
- Jane: But not good!
- Peter: Well, I could find a job that pays more but enjoy it less.
- Jane: Are you sure about that? I think you could find a better job; you're intelligent, hard working and cooperative.
- Peter: You say this because you're my friend. Any company would be interested in my CV.
- Jane: You could come and work in our company! You'll easily get it and you'll get a piece of action! We would work together, I would like that!
- Peter: Is that an offer? Do you think I'll get this job?
- Jane: Yes! I'm serious. Listen, I'll have a word with the human resources people next week. I know that there are some vacancies at the moment. I have to go now, I have a meeting! I'll call you next week. Send me your CV by email, please.
- Peter: Ok, thank you very much Jane, you're a good friend! See you soon!
- Jane: See you soon!
